Epiphany

Sacred days, feasts, holydays, and spiritual festivals are invitations to reconnect with our own spirit. We do not have to belong to a specific religion or believe in the literal details of the origins of the event to relate to the symbolic metaphors behind the holiday. Symbols are the language of the soul. They are universal.

As the story goes, three learned leaders Balthazar, Melchior and Caspar followed a star. They journeyed out of the darkness, guided by a light, towards a newborn life. To honour the new little spirit they had gifts from the earth: gold and incense.

Each night the moon kisses secretly the lover who counts the stars.
Rumi

- What is being birthed in your life?
- What lights your spirit?
- How do you step out of the dark?
- What in your life is calling you?
- Are you a leader of your own life?
- Ready for a journey? Take a step.
- How do you honour your spirit?
- Is your fresh start as smooth as a baby's butt or does the past stain it?

MY EPIPHANY

I love rocks! I love mountains, earthquakes, volcanos, and anything to do with earth energy. To me, rocks...well, they rock! I also love jewelry. I love to shop for jewelry. Between the shoppers' holy days of Black Friday and Cyber Monday, a renegade Santa reportedly shamed shoppers for their impact on staff family Thanksgivings. The ethical ghosts of purchases past whispered to me too. Philippines' relief drew out the better half of folks. A guilt ridden idea was hatched. "You could use your jewelry to help." So, I did. Now, having followed the star, seen the light and dodged some metaphoric camel pooh, I resolve to use my super savy shopping skills for good rather than for evil.

Sacred stones speak to the soul

When I sit still, take time, and listen, the next step will appear. My soul craves beauty: beauty in art, in texture, in the cut of a good outfit, in flowers, in beautiful music and in jewelry. Once I realized that I don't crave the jewels, I crave the beauty they radiate; I decided I don't need to buy for me. I can buy for others and see the beauty uplift them. I have an eye for unique pieces, the knowledge of gemstones, the skill to sniff out a good deal, and the wisdom to skirt the fine line between pretty junk and affordable quality. I love the thrill of the hunt. I watch for weeks, like a tiger in the grass, waiting for the right price (and free shipping) before I pounce.

Beauty is sacred. It evokes an eternal moment of awe. Beautiful stones in beguiling settings take your breath away and, for a divine instant, you transcend the mundane.
